You have found yourself in a very dark place – a place within you. You find yourself searching for something. Sometimes you know what it is but can't quite grasp it and at other times that search leads you on a chase for something that leaves you empty. It is elusive. It evades you and it haunts you. It creeps up on you when you sleep and when you are awake. It permeates your very soul.

What eludes you and what weighs on you is what weighs on all men and women at sometime in their lives. Belief. Faith. Relationships. Hope is a fundamentally empowering and universal word. Things happen for a reason, don't they? Is there a greater being or a greater spirit, something greater than us? If so, why are the good made to suffer? How do our lives play out with both humor and sadness as we look for our Elusive Thing? -Steven Golub, Principal-Elusive Things ©2008 by Steven B. Golub

I am very proud to be a kid in a school that has a principal that wrote his own book. I will write more about it after I read it. My Mommy and Daddy are going to read it and I will try to get them to write about it, too.

Principal Steven Golub is having a book signing at Barnes & Noble in Bay Shore on Wednesday March 26th at 4:30 PM
